Household Appliances (White Goods) 2012

Single and two-person homes now make up the bulk of households. Britons who live on their own or as a couple typically live in smaller spaces. This phenomenon has increased the demand for white goods that are space-efficient or that serve multiple functions.

Executive Summary

This Key Note Market Update examines the white goods industry for households in the UK. In spite of the economic downturn, according to Key Note, the market grew by 2.5% in 2011.

The white goods market in the UK is divided into three principle categories: the home laundry appliances and dishwashers sector is the largest sector, and accounted for 36.4% of the market in 2011; the cooking appliances section, which made up 35.1% of the market; and the cooling appliances sector, which accounted for the remaining 28.5% of the market in 2011.

Growth in the white goods industry has traditionally been dictated by the state of the property market. When it was booming, the appliances market benefitted from the trend; however, when home sales slumped, sales too took a dive. Although the housing market is struggling as a result of the economic crisis, consumers are choosing to invest in their homes instead. Moreover, they are choosing to buy premium household appliances with features and functions that make their lives easier, chores more enjoyable and that save them money. Although initially

The white goods market in the UK is divided into three principle categories: the home laundry appliances and dishwashers sector is the largest sector, and accounted for 36.4% of the market in 2011; the cooking appliances section, which made up 35.1% of the market; and the cooling appliances sector, which accounted for the remaining 28.5% of the market in 2011.

Growth in the white goods industry has traditionally been dictated by the state of the property market. When it was booming, the appliances market benefitted from the trend; however, when home sales slumped, sales too took a dive. Although the housing market is struggling as a result of the economic crisis, consumers are choosing to invest in their homes instead. Moreover, they are choosing to buy premium household appliances with features and functions that make their lives easier, chores more enjoyable and that save them money. Although initially expensive purchases, these investments are likely to be economical in the long run.

Moreover, although the population in the UK is growing exponentially, the size of households is shrinking. Single and two-person homes now make up the bulk of households. Britons who live on their own or as a couple typically live in smaller spaces. This phenomenon has increased the demand for white goods that are space-efficient or that serve multiple functions.

Multi-purpose machines are driving sales in the white goods industry in the UK. Washer-dryers and fridge-freezers are the fastest growing product groups in the market. Buying multi-purpose appliances is cost-effective because, although consumers have to pay more than if they were to buy a single machine, they spend less than if they were to buy two separate machines.

Key Note expects the market to continue rising over the next 5 years. However, the rate will slow as the years go by, as consumers become increasingly cautious spenders under the strain of the persisting crisis. Between 2012 and 2016, its value will increase by 5.8%

Bowers Wilkins offers new colour choices for P5 and C5 headphones

LENGTH: 242 words

Oct 09, 2012 (Pocket-lint.com:<http://www.pocket-lint.com> Delivered by Newstex)
Ivory and Satin Titanium

Bowers Wilkins now offers two new colour schemes for its hugely popular P5 and C5 headphones. While the new editions retain all of the audio performance characteristics that have impressed the Pocket-lint team in the past, there's more design choice.

As well as the conventional black pair, the Bowers Wilkins P5s now also come in Ivory, which will match a white iPhone 4S or iPhone 5. They retain the rigid aluminium faceplate and premium-grade leather earpads, but offer a less blokey, more subtle look.

The C5 in-ear noise-cancelling headphones now also come in Satin Titanium as well as black. They too offer the same Secure Loop design and Micro Porous Filter as the original version.

Each of the headphones comes with an approved Made for iPhone cable, with in-line microphone and remote functionality. Plus, the P5 cans also come with a generic audio cable that suits all other MP3 players and smartphones.

Available now, both the Black and Ivory versions of the Bowers Wilkins P5 cost ?249.99, while the Bowers Wilkins C5 in either Gloss Black or Satin Titanium retail for ?149.99.
